Chapter 61: The Divine Triad's Reluctance

Despite their overwhelming power and the ability to project anything from their Inner Worlds into the outside multiverse at full strength, the Divine Triad has never once considered such an action. Their reluctance to unleash their immense forces beyond their domains is not born of weakness, but rather of a deep understanding of balance and purpose. The Divine Triad’s decision to keep their forces within their Inner Worlds is guided by a profound principle: there is no need for them to interfere with the affairs of the outside multiverse, as it is already well-guarded and well-balanced.

The Outside Multiverse Already Has Its Own Defenders

The outside multiverse, with its numerous realms and dimensions, is not a place lacking in strength or defense. The Apostles of God, Heavenly Soldiers, Dark Apostles, Shadowkins, Dragonkins, Shadow Lords, and Fiery Dragon Lords stand ready at all times to protect the multiverse from threats. Each of these factions, though distinct, shares a singular purpose: to safeguard the multiverse from external invasions, raids, and any forces that seek to upset the natural order.

These powerful entities, each with their own vast numbers, form a near-immovable barrier against any potential disruptions. The Divine Triad, in their wisdom, recognizes that bringing forth their own forces into the outside multiverse would only upset this delicate balance. The Divine Triad’s strength is already reflected in the overwhelming power of their legions within their Inner Worlds, and there is simply no situation in which their intervention would be required outside.

The Inner Worlds and Their Inhabitants

The residents and forces of the Inner Worlds are creatures of unimaginable power, each perfectly suited to their respective realms. These realms are not just worlds—they are extensions of the Divine Triad’s will, and their inhabitants thrive in these environments, living their best lives in these perfect worlds. To remove them from their domains would be to strip away their natural essence, and it is something the Divine Triad will never do. They are content with their creations and the peace within their realms, knowing that their power is safely contained and never needed in the outside world.

The Forces of the Inner Worlds and Their Numbers

1. Lumiel’s Army of Light (Luxoria Eterna)

Celestial Archons: 10,000

Luminara Knights: 1 billion

Lightborn Legion: 100 billion

Seraphim Riders: 5 million

2. Umbrios’ Shadow Legion (Umbra Nexum)

Shadow Warlords: 50,000

Ebon Knights: 500 million

Nocturnal Stalkers: 10 billion

Nightshade Beasts: 2 million

3. Drakion’s Draconic Host (Drakarys Aeterna)

Draconian Overlords: 20,000

Flameborn Legionnaires: 1 billion

Skybound Wyverns: 100 million

Infernal Titans: 1 million

These mighty forces, representing the epitome of their creators’ power, are perfectly suited to their Inner Worlds. They exist in harmony with their environments and fulfill their roles as defenders, builders, and creators within their domains. However, none of them are needed outside their worlds, and the Divine Triad has no desire to bring them into a multiverse already so well-protected.

The Divine Triad’s Wisdom

The Divine Triad’s reluctance to bring their Inner World forces into the outside multiverse is a testament to their wisdom. They understand the importance of balance and the natural order of things. With such formidable forces already in place within the multiverse, the Divine Triad sees no need to intervene. Their Inner World armies will remain where they belong, thriving in their perfect domains, while the forces of the outside multiverse will continue to uphold their peace and security.

In this delicate equilibrium, the Divine Triad stands not as conquerors but as wise rulers, watching over the multiverse with a steady hand, content in knowing that the power they’ve entrusted to the universe is more than enough to maintain order.
